IRM East Africa: Risk Leaders Conference 2017

The recent past has seen political, social and technological upheaval, forcing us to re-examine some basic assumptions about the world we live in. Previously large institutions have been brought down to their knees, results of a Presidential election in Kenya have been nullified and there have been changes within the banking sector including interest rate capping. Subtle changes that were previously ignored have produced chaotic results and repeated failures of institutions have led to a loss of trust in 'experts', risking the livelihoods of thousands of people.

What to expect

Are risk managers expected to be 'all-knowing'?

What is the importance of culture and behaviour?

How should boards approach their governance and risk management responsibilities?

This Risk Leaders conference will focus on how to anticipate unexpected events and the need for aligning culture and behaviour across an organization. We will explore what influences the ability to anticipate and manage risks, focusing on the unexpected changes that have been rapidly evolving across this region.

This is a free event with limited spaces. To book and for more information please visit our website: www.theirm.org/eastafrica.
